

Code of Ethics

Ashley Bray

Personal Statement

As a college student and a human in general, going into the workforce next year, I have a responsibility to myself and my peers to show that I am trustworthy, reliable, inclusive, and fair in all areas of my life. These are not limited to work relationships but all I may establish in my lifetime, such as friendships, spouse relationships, and possible parental relationships in the far future.

Trustworthiness

Trustworthiness is the prime basis of ensuring peers are comfortable working with and being around me. To establish trustworthiness, I must develop my relationships to the point in which people believe what I say and do the right thing when no one is watching or when it is challenging to show my peers who I am. Being honest and transparent with those in my life strengthens the trust in the relationship as I will be open with everything I am capable of. Also, valuing confidentiality between elements is relevant in all relationships and aspects of life.

Treating Others Fairly

Treating people fairly and with respect in the workplace and in life is imperative. This includes but is not limited to, procedures and punishments across all areas of life. Fairness is essential, but also transparent about what I am doing to help continue the common goals of my situation. I will respect the opinions of others and use their ideas in future decision-making.

Inclusivity

By embracing the diversities we as humans have that make us unique, I can promote policies for myself and others to ensure everyone is being heard and seen. In turn, this allows me to build a stronger community of peers by being inclusive to all those around me, which supports and shows others that I am worthy of their respect and trust.

Reliability

When doing what I say I will do, and following through with my tasks and responsibilities, I prove my commitment to my peers and myself. By doing this, I prove to myself and others that I am a reliable and consistent person to deal with, making myself more committed to those around me.